WHITE MIKE RAPPS

by Rebecca Guyon

Rapper White Mike hopes to put Pleasanton on the hip hop map

Pleasanton may not be known for its hip hop scene, but Michael Alexander, better known as “White Mike,” is hoping to change all that. Alexander, 25, is trying to make it in the music industry as a hip-hop artist and just released his second CD, “Famous,” which he self-produced in Tracy. A graduate of Amador Valley High School, he moved to San Diego after graduating and recently moved back to Pleasanton to collaborate with producer and friend Tony Tols.

“I would say the bottom line that sets my music apart is that I’m just being me,” Alexander said. “I’m not putting on a front. I’m not trying to act like a ‘gansta.’ I rap about being from the suburbs.”

Alexander moved to Pleasanton when he was 6 years old with his mother, Leslie, from Washington D.C. Growing up, school wasn’t really his interest, but he did enjoy creative writing. It wasn’t until he was 17 that he started to take an interest in rapping.

“Everyone messes around and raps for fun, but one time I was at a buddy’s house and it was then I thought I’d give it a shot,” he said. “The reaction I got was so positive.”

Although he started working on rap and hip hop, Alexander didn’t take it seriously until about five years ago.

“I’d been doing music for a while, but I wasn’t as professional about it before,” he said. “I didn’t realize how much had to be put into it. I would do rap battles and hope someone would see me and I’d get a record deal off of that, but that’s just not how it works. The longer I’m in it, the more I realize how much work it is.”

After graduating from Amador in 1998, Alexander went to California State University, San Diego, on a football scholarship, but had to leave the school due to his failing grades. He moved back to the Bay Area and attended Chabot Community College where he hoped to continue playing football, but shortly after arriving, he was injured and had to bow out for the season. This was a frustrating turn of events, but it ended up giving Alexander the time he needed to re-focus on music. He decided to move back to San Diego so he could be closer to L.A. and to reconnect with the friends he had there.

In San Diego, Alexander competed in several rap battles and in 2002 recorded his first CD. The self-titled record has six songs on it and was also co-produced with Tols. San Diego afforded Alexander one of the highlights of his career—performing at Street Scene, a huge, annual music festival, in 2003.

“It was a really big show in terms of how many people were there,” Alexander said. “I got a lot of positive feedback. It let me know that I was doing the right thing.”

Now, Alexander is back in Pleasanton and performed at the Alameda County Fair last weekend.

“I love Pleasanton because it’s where I grew up,” he said. “You’re always more comfortable at your real home.”

Those familiar with Alexander’s music might be surprised to hear that, considering some of his songs. Several of his songs mock the suburban lifestyle, and he even has one song titled “Pleasanton” that makes fun of the quiet town.

“The song entitled ‘Pleasanton’ is just saying how it really is; that there’s not a lot for kids to do and the kids are bored, the cops are bored,” Alexander said. “I love Pleasanton and it’s just taking a humorous approach. I’m keeping it real for the kids who live here.”

In addition to creating his own music, Alexander has also started his own production company, Savd Out Records. With his own production company, Alexander is able to maintain his artistic integrity and have a better shot at getting his name out, he said.

Alexander’s next big show will be here in Pleasanton at the Aura Nightclub on July 21 in celebration of the release of “Famous.” He hopes it will kick off further distribution of the album and get his name out. Soon, his Web site www.whitemike.com should also be up and running, helping that goal.

“I definitely plan on being on MTV and being a national artist that everybody recognizes and do it a lot bigger than I’m doing now,” he said. “Right now, I’m just starting, doing everything on my own, and it’s difficult, but I’m up to the task.” ■

Tshaka Campbell performs at a poetry slam.

Pleasanton residents looking for a creative outlet, a new experience or just some good literary fun can join Poetry Slam Champion Tshaka Campbell tomorrow during an all-day poetry workshop here in Pleasanton. For those who don't know, slam poetry is a type of performance poetry that gained mainstream appeal since the mid-90s and is credited with attracting youth, and the general public, back to poetry. That's why Pleasanton Poet Laureate Cynthia Bryant, whose task it is to keep poetry on the forefront of Pleasantonian minds, organized this workshop for older teens and adults.

Campbell is an accomplished slam poet who was the 2005 San Francisco Grand Slam Champion and is slated to represent Hollywood/Los Angeles at the national poetry championships in Austin, Texas this coming August. Those who are familiar with the Pleasanton literary scene may recognize Campbell because he has done several events in Pleasanton, including appearing as a guest poet at the Pleasanton Century House Poetry Readings and presenting at the 2006 Pleasanton Poetry, Prose and Arts Festival.

Campbell is originally from London, England and is of Jamaican descent. For the past 10 years, he has been writing and performing poetry while also working as an executive in the financial services industry. Currently a San Francisco resident, he first studied at City College of New York and Hampton University, as well as New York University and the Fashion Institute of Technology before moving to the West Coast. Campbell travels across the country and has performed his poetry at such famous locations as the Nuyorican Café in New York City.

The workshop is $50 per person and includes a continental breakfast and a box lunch. Reservations may be made by contacting Michelle Russo at 931-5350 or mrusso@ci.pleasanton.ca.us.

City Lights

Warner Home Video DVD
1hr 27mins
Director: Charlie Chaplin

Chaplin's "City Lights," along with "The Kid," is the kind of film you feel ashamed for reminiscing on how it gets you choked up, especially if you recall its final image of Chaplin and the blind flower girl, and the chasm of perceived rejection that may or may not be between them. Not to give much away about its plot, but it's the great sentimental payoff that Chaplin loved, in which we feel guilty for participating as to wallow in our most romantic melancholy fantasies. "City Lights" is also Chaplin's most polished and uniquely artistic. The look of the film itself (nicely scrubbed for home video) is the accumulation of all the beautiful analog technicalities of the silent film era, especially so in the editing and cinematography, which has evolved in filmmaking to a sophistication of storytelling that, at times, seems yet to be rivaled.

It is well known that Chaplin made "City Lights" as a silent film four years after the "Jazz Singer" had made "talkies" the norm. Everyone thought the film was doomed because talking pictures meant progress and you can't (especially in America) go against the divine tide of technical progress. Chaplin himself, however, was not so worried; he knew what pushed people dramatically and, more so, knew the limitations of dramatic sophistication that he could present to his (mainly) working class audiences. In 1931, although it was not the worst year of The Depression, it was filled with enough dreariness that the movies seemed to offer a cheap escape. Chaplin, with his "Little Tramp" character, was the antidote to their anxiety because he was on the same level, or worse off, than the audience.

"City Lights" could be construed as a simplistic love story, but its sentiments lie much deeper. Chaplin was 40 at the time he made the film and the Tramp's skittishness and vicious streaks, manners possibly of a younger Chaplin, had dissipated into a type of Zen-styled middle age. The story itself is pure hokum but, in Chaplin's hands, it becomes a simplistic poetry of hokum. After a series of misadventures, the Tramp finds himself mistaken for a rich man by a blind flower girl (lovely Virginia Cherrill) whom he instantly falls for. Meanwhile, the Tramp saves the life of a real rich man (hilarious Harry Myers) from suicide who only happens to recognize the Tramp when he is drunk. While the Tramp plays the rich benefactor to the girl, he discovers that she and her grandmother are to be evicted from their apartment if they cannot come up with $22(!) while, simultaneously, there is also a miracle cure for blindness that is free to the poor if only the trip could be afforded to Germany (because all good movie doctors are Teutonic).

What's perfect about "City Lights" is the way Chaplin's hokiness masks as sincerity, which could only really be pulled off in the silent realm. The movie is all emotion: laughter and tears, and Chaplin understood this to be the dynamics of the silent image. It's hanky time at the end because the Tramp and the blind girl's only function is to only illicit pathos by the gallons from us and, the final image of Chaplin with his androgynous puppy-dog look of hope while biting on a flower, is an image that seems forged from the movie unconsciousness as the archetype of bittersweet. —Joe Ramirez

Vacation homes can be challenging to buy, own

Real estate analysts weighs needs, pitfalls

by Jeb Bing

A new book by Canadian author Douglas Hunter gives the information buyers and sellers need in dealing on vacation homes, something many from Pleasanton consider after a week or two in the mountains during a summer break.

The book, "The Cottage Ownership Guide," was reviewed by Robert J. Bruss in his column in Inman News.

"When I first spotted this well-designed book in a major bookstore, I thought perhaps it was about architectural styles of small homes," Bruss said. "Wrong. Instead, it explains virtually every aspect of buying, owning and selling summer waterfront cottages."

Bruss said that never having owned a summer home, but having enjoyed many visits to cottages owned by friends and relatives, he didn't realize all the possible pitfalls buyers can encounter unless they understand the major considerations of buying a summer home.

Equally important, he added, sellers of vacation cottages can learn from this book what smart buyers will demand before purchase.

"Although the book primarily takes the viewpoint of prospective cottage buyers, heavy emphasis is placed on the income-tax aspects for both buyers and sellers," Bruss said. "The book begins with buyer needs and wants lists, including driving-distance considerations, and even possible plans for permanent, year-round living during retirement."

According to Bruss, if the book has a flaw it is that it constantly over-emphasizes the Canadian taxation and ownership laws. While it is interesting to learn the differences between U.S. and Canadian laws, by the end of the book the U.S. reader becomes thoroughly convinced that owning a Canadian vacation cottage offers few benefits and many drawbacks for U.S. citizens.

Bruss cites Hunter's warning that buyers of vacation homes need to be aware the listing agent primarily represents the seller and, unless buyers hire their own buyer's agent, they are unrepresented. He also notes the potential problems with buying direct from a seller who might not be aware of all the defect disclosure requirements.

Hunter, Bruss reports, also places heavy emphasis on the need for the buyer to obtain a current survey of the property to be certain there are no encroachments or other undisclosed problems.

"Then the investigation moves on to having a professional inspection of the cottage, with special attention to the water supply and septic system," Bruss writes. "The author even explains the pros and cons of buying a tear-down cottage and the frequent difficulty of building new to comply with today's local zoning and construction requirements."

In his book, Hunter suggests contacting local mortgage lenders who are familiar with the area and are often anxious to originate local mortgages, Bruss reports. He even explains the tax consequences of deducting mortgage interest on a second home.

"Unexpected in this book are the very complete discussions of sharing cottage ownership with friends or relatives, possible pitfalls to anticipate and resolve, and even the pros and cons of renting the cottage to tenants when it is not being used by the owner," according to Bruss. "The book also contains unanticipated discussions about using a cottage as a year-round retirement home, and the possible drawbacks of passing a vacation cottage on to adult children."

Hunter's book is available at many bookstores, public libraries and through www. Amazon.com. ■
